Appendix C

Medical Instructions

Everyone in your family, whether accompanying you to Canada or not, must undergo a medical examination. If you are a divorced or separated parent, a minor child of whom you have joint or sole custody is considered your dependent child, even if he or she usually lives with the other parent and is not accompanying you to Canada.

Canadian immigration law defines as inadmissible to Canada a person who is suffering from any disease, disorder, disability, or other health impairment as a result of the nature, severity or probable duration of which they are or are likely to be a danger to public health or to public safety, or their admission would cause or might reasonably be expected to cause excessive demands on health or social services. If your family member is found inadmissible, you will be inadmissible also.

You will receive the forms and instructions for the medical examination, as well as the list of designated doctors in your country of residence, when a positive selection decision is made, usually at the time of the interview or when the decision is made to waive the interview. It is up to you to make an appointment with the designated doctor of your choice. You are also responsible for paying all the fees for the medical examination.

The permanent resident visa has the same validity period as the medical results, that is, 12 months from the date of the first examination or test.
